What is Parkinson’s Disease?

Parkinson’s disease is a progressive neurological disease that affects more than one million Americans. There are approximately 60,000 people diagnosed each year. The average age of diagnosis is 60, although the number of people diagnosed under age 50 is rising. Classic signs of Parkinson’s disease:

- Resting tremor on one side of the body—arm, leg, hand or lips
- Lack of arm swing when walking
- Small handwriting
- Softer voice than usual
- General slowness of movement or bradykinesia
- Stiffness of limbs (rigidity)
- Gait or balance problems
- Stooped posture or shuffling walk

The exact cause of the disease is not known, but research points to a combination of genetic and environmental factors. While there are effective treatments—such as medication, surgery, speech therapy, physical therapy, and exercise—there is currently no cure.
Our Role and Impact

Our mission is to raise funds for research to end Parkinson’s disease (PD), support the development of new therapies, and improve the quality of life for those living with the disease through patient-centered research and resources.

The Parkinson Alliance both funds—more than $30 million in research funded—and conducts research in its own right.

- We fund outstanding scientists at the forefront of Parkinson’s disease research. We award grants on a selected basis to major research institutions and partner organizations around the globe.

- We conduct patient-centered outcomes research to help improve the quality of life for those with Parkinson’s disease. To date, thousands of participants have provided over 18,000 responses in almost 30 studies covering a broad range of symptoms.

- We believe that people with Parkinson’s disease have the power to advance research.
